A call for collective work against pollution

By Frida Mdanat

WITH THE rise of technology, man became a major modifier of the biosphere. However, even in the agrarian period of man's development, he had a major impact on the rural landscape. The overgrazing of the plants by his domestic animals resulted in the destruction of forests and ground cover and fostered erosion of the land. In the course of the ensuing centuries, industrialization, urbanization, and the development of intensive agriculture produced many of the environmental crises now confronting mankind.

Water, air, noise, thermal, pesticide, and solid waste pollution, excessive radiation levels, and the loss of open space pose threats to the environment that are compounded by an increasing population.

However, since the 1970's man's concern over the environment has become increasingly popular as he realised that it is basic for his survival.

Hence, environmentalists from all over the world gathered together at a conference in 1972 in Stockholm to review the world's environmental threats. Following the conference, the Stockholm Declaration on environment was issued. The declaration was followed by an appeal to the United Nations to take the necessary measures to protect the world from destruction. The appeal resulted in the establishment of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) with the headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya and the membership of all countries around the globe.

Since then the programme began expanding its activities to study polluting factors threatening mankind in order to come up with solutions for the problems. Out of its belief in the importance of environmental protection, UNEP dedicated 5 June as the World Environment Day to remind the world of the dangers threatening mankind if governments and private institutions and societies persist in ignoring the issue and fail to act firmly.

In an information kit, issued by UNEP on the occasion of this year, Executive Director of UNEP, Mostafa Tolba, addressed world environmentalists stating that for 1988, UNEP has chosen the slogan "When People Put the Environment First, Development Will Last". He says, that this slogan summarizes the World Environment Day which links protecting the environment with public participation and sustainable development.

It has long been the philosophy of UNEP, he adds, that sustainable development — development without destruction — can be achieved only by protection of the environment which provides the natural resource base on which development depends.

"To protect and rehabilitate soils, forests, fresh water and marine resources, everybody must play an increasing part. Governments and institutions cannot do it all. It is the actions of millions of individuals which degrade the environment; it is their actions which must protect it."

Jordan on its part joined other countries on 5 June in observing the World Environment Day. On the occasion, Minister of Municipal and Rural Affairs, and the Environment, Youssef Hamdan Al-Jaber, issued a statement in which he appealed to citizens in the rural and urban areas to help protect the environment and prevent pollution in all fields of life. He stressed the need to stop the encroachment of deserts on arable land through the implementation of afforestation programmes and planting more trees. He said that Jordan looks forward to achieving a balance between the residents of urban and rural areas and is trying to accomplish a comprehensive and planned development that can contribute to the protection of the environment.

According to Dr Sulyan Tell, director general of the Environment Department, Jordan is currently in the process of putting forward a national strategy for the protection of the environment. The strategy, he adds, a comprehensive plan to protect all aspects of the environment until the year 2000. In two years, the strategy will be ready for adoption by the government.

The Department, on its hand, states Dr Sulyan conducted a number of studies on water resources and waste disposal. It examines samples of water and discharges to their purity, supervises licensing of farms and industries and exerts efforts, with the collaboration of the relevant authorities for preserving agricultural lands.

Dr Sulyan, on his part, gives lectures at school and universities around the Kingdom to spread awareness among the public on means of environmental protection.

"We teach people the importance of the environment and individual responsibility and participation," says Dr Sulyan.

The mealybug meets a natural end

By Pam Dougherty
Special to The Star

THE JORDAN Valley's mealybug problem has been solved. Until recently, mealybugs were attacking the citrus crops in the valley. As they feed on the citrus plant the mealybugs inject a toxin that causes the leaves and stems to die. The leaves and stems then fall and crop losses can be as much as 50 per cent. Now the bugs have been eliminated, not by pesticides or other expensive methods, but by a biological control programme that costs only JD 167,000 and produces no threat to the environment.

In the past, insecticides have been used against the mealybugs but with little success as their bodies are covered with a waxy substance that is difficult to penetrate. Biological controls, using parasites and predators that feed on the mealybug, were first considered and The Jordan Valley Agricultural Services Centre at Deir Alla was chosen as the location of the programme.

Work began with a stroke of luck when Dr Dale Meyerdirk of numbers could be raised for field release.

Two Ministry of Agriculture engineers, Mariam Bashir and Mary Badousheh, were assigned and over the next two years a number of different parasite species were collected during trips to Guam, Hawaii, India, Pakistan and Egypt while the insectary was set up at the Jordan Valley Agricultural Services Centre.

The first parasite release was made onto wild Zizyphus or Christ's Thorn bushes which are a suitable host plant and which the farmers would not be likely to spray in their efforts to get rid of the mealybug. Once the parasites were established they were then released into a number of citrus orchards and by as early as 1985 the mealybug population was starting to decline. By 1987, the parasites gradually spread throughout the Jordan Valley and as far south in Jordan as Aqaba and the mealybug had virtually disappeared.

There is now no reason why the mealybug population should re-establish itself — unless the parasite is eliminated by insecticides used against other insect pests. Dr Meyerdirk now recommends that if farmers are planning to use pesticides against such pests as mites, aphids and scale insects they should follow certain important guidelines — 1. That they use an acaricide compound against mites. 2. That against scale insects they use a summer oil that will suffocate only them and have no residual effects on other insects.

The international dimension

Biological controls are not new. The first large scale success story occurred in California as far back as 1890 when cottony cushion scale insects attacking citrus crops were eliminated by a natural enemy imported from Australia. They have never returned.

In the succeeding eighty or so years the biological solutions lost ground to highly profitable chemical fertilizers. It was only when bodies such as the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in the United States began to reject the many pesticides as dangers to the environment and to health, that interest in the biological approach revived.

Today pesticide producers are increasingly reluctant to spend the 10 years and $40 million needed to develop a new product when there is a chance that it will be rejected by the EPA and other national environmental bodies.

As a result both the traditional techniques of parasite and predator introduction and new ones including sterilization and genetic manipulation, are now receiving greater attention and funding. The United States is expanding its programmes and UK-based Commonwealth Institute of Biological Control (CIBC) is co-operating with national centres throughout the world.

Although not a member of the Commonwealth, Jordan is eligible to join the CIBC and to take advantage of its services such as insect identification, literature searches and biological control laboratory services.

Overall, the Arab states have been slow to develop an interest in the work of biological control and Dr Meyerdirk is confident that, if it combines the experience gained from the mealybug programme and the new projects now planned with substantial international connections, Jordan could establish itself as regional leader in the field.

Measures needed to counter summer diseases

By Diane C. Chlangwa
Star Staff Writer

UPON ENTERING the open market located on downtown Amman, King Talal Street, one soon forgets the rumbling motor sounds created by the haphazardly moving traffic and is instead greeted by the booming resonant voices of the market merchants.

"Taleeta shilin Likhyar" (150 file for a kilogramme of cucumbers); Batata arba binos lira (four kilogrammes of potatoes for half a dinar); Kilowain batata brobes (two kilogrammes of potatoes for a quarter dinar).

The voices resonate across the marketplace, often making it difficult for the inexperienced shopper to determine what the merchants are saying.

Cherries, grapefruits, green peas, cauliflower, fish, eggs, yogurt... the list goes on. As one meanders through the crowded alleyways, being careful not to walk over some of the stands set up right on the walkway, the buzzing sounds, coming from the numerous customers determined to pay less for their goods, soon engulf you into a world which many never thought still existed.

Unfortunately, as the hot summer months approach, the risk of contracting sicknesses caused by eating contaminated foods is greater than ever. According to Dr. Samer Hinawi, resident in charge of the Emergency Ward at Jordan University Hospital, the hospital treats more cases of gastritis — a combination of diarrhoea and severe abdominal pains.

Dr. Hinawi added that a lot of this is caused by the increased consumption of fruit juices, ice-cream and other foodstuffs either not washed properly or contaminated by harmful viruses which flourish in perishable foods in the hot summer time.

But in order to control some of these summer diseases, the Greater Amman Municipality has gone to great lengths over the last few years to control the spread of disease in the summer time. Noting that a lot of the problems concerning food poisoning and the like occur mostly among those eating foods obtained from street vendors and the varying open food markets and shops in the Kingdom, the municipality has set up a campaign to control this epidemic.

To begin with, stiff penalties coming in the form of fines and imprisonment are now being clamped on offenders.

According to Greater Amman Municipality Public Health Assistant to the Undersecretary, Dr. Hussein Zaki, the municipality's food observation sector is directly concerned with foods being sold in open markets and by street vendors.

"The food inspection department is concerned with the concept that food be fit for public consumption," stated Dr. Said. "However," he added, "We are still finding it very difficult to control the wandering salesmen because they usually manage to hide from the inspectors."

To ensure that the city is covered thoroughly with food inspectors, the Municipality today has a Community Medicine Department which is one of the four public health affairs departments set up by the municipality. According to Dr. Said, the food observation sector — which is a sector of the community medicine department, concentrates on the observation and inspection of food starting from industrial additive compositions of food standards sold to the public regarding quality and quantity, and setting food handling and transport regulations.

But for many traditional salesmen found in the open markets and street corners, asking them to either stop selling their merchandise or change their marketing techniques — which in this case would mean dissuading customers to handle their fruits and vegetables before buying, is too much to ask.

Stated a fruit and vegetable merchant, "I believe that the customers pick at the fruits and vegetables is not only unhygienic but bad for the food just as continuous handling bruises the food. However, I cannot tell them not to pick and choose as I will just lose my customers."

For a street vendor selling "Karabash Habab" (home made candy) who would not reveal his name, selling uncovered karabash on the street in an open cart is something he has done for some 20 years. When questioned as to whether the municipality had taken action against him, the salesman stated, "I was picked up once but the authorities seem to leave me alone now. I think they respect the fact that I have been selling my karabash for over 20 years now."

The job of municipality health inspectors has not only concentrated in the downtown open market areas. Other areas of great concern to the authorities are the various public eating houses and food stores found throughout the country.

According to Mr. Said, bookings serving food have to pass inspection and be up to the standards. He added personal hygiene of those handling food is just as important, failure to comply with the law can lead to fines ranging from JD 20 to JD 200 or possible imprisonment from seven days to as long as a year.

With the summer here, the municipality has begun a campaign for the control of houseflies, cockroaches, rats and rodents. The campaign will concentrate on areas such as vegetable markets and some residential areas.

"In regard to rats and rodents, we have succeeded in controlling them in the areas they most concentrate in, which in this case are the over-populated areas of Amman," said Dr. Said.

With such conditions under control, the level of reoccurring summer diseases will hopefully decrease, added Dr. Hinawi.

Other areas of concern, according to Hinawi, are making sure not to drink contaminated water. To warn mothers with babies she emphasized that mothers boil baby bottles and use using unboiled water to make baby milk. In case symptoms of the commonly occurring gastritis occur — which are feeling crampy, diarrhoea, dryness of the mouth and persistent tiredness, one should immediately seek medical attention, she added.

"I stress that you immediately seek medical advice if you notice such symptoms. This should not be put off especially with children as dehydration in children can be risky if left untreated."

Commenting on the increased consumption of icecream in the summer, Dr. Said stressed that everyone buy icecream from registered establishments to avoid infections of some sort.

"Stay away from the small boys who sell icecream off the street," cautioned Dr. Said. "Also," he warned, "when you buy perishable foods, look for the expiration labels. If you see expired goods being sold, contact our agencies."

In pursuit of Jordan's beauty and soul was ambitious too, and I really wanted to make it. And you know, you appreciate money even more when you know how it is to be without it. I had to make it."

And here again luck interferes in Zohrab's life and art. A competition in photography held under the patronage of her Majesty the late Queen Alia, in 1971, allowed him to show his gift and won him the first prize. I owe a great deal to his Majesty King Hussein and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan, professionally and personally. They allowed me to complete and improve my self-taught photographic education by sending me to New York to a specialized school. "There opens the second door to success, and a big one, for Zohrab Marjanian, from then on, became the official photographer of the Royal Family."

The other side of the camera

"If you think it's easy... Forget it!" says Zohrab — The big "Z" for some of his close friends — talking about his job. With him, you either "got it" or "forgot it." In between, there are lots of work, energy, fatigue, rodents and also satisfactions. "I see life in my own way, and my purpose is to convey it to others and make them appreciate it. I must feel...feel...and then make sure that people will like it."

Nature is his main concern nowadays. The landscape of Jordan and its variety have kept him particularly busy this year; and the fruits of his labour will be collected in his second book. The first one, made out of his personal initiative and funds in 1985, was intended as a gift for King Hussein. Pictures of the King in his professional and family life intermingled with shots of the country and its landscape. An atmosphere of serenity and beauty prevailed in his first work.

His second book, about to be published in England, "Will be dedicated to the people of Jordan, those who live close to nature and appreciate it. I always found them when I needed them. They helped pushing my car when it refused to work; they offered me their hospitality and their tea. I used to find them by following the smell of tea in early mornings." So here is a book for the lovers of nature in Jordan and elsewhere, and Zohrab hopes to see it on various shelves all over the world. "I wish I could show the world how beautiful my country is, and how contrasted and varied her landscape can be!"

Indeed, it was not easy to achieve this book. Funds had to be raised (they are private and strictly Jordanian), hundreds of trips in the snow or the heat had to be taken, climbing hills and rocks, crossing rivers and waterfalls. And Zohrab would be there, moving like a tireless hunter, dressed like a modern explorer with hiking boots and comfortable clothes full of pockets everywhere, yet with a touch of fashion and a pleasant harmony of grey, blue or green.

And then, armed with his cameras and lenses, he would start his straining and indefatigable search for beauty.

Incidents, such as a car breakdown, or a thick haze, or a closely missed sunset, are nothing for him compared to plastic bags hanging from trees and rocks on the other side of the mountain: "My worst times were those when I had to climb hills on the opposite side, after a long and painful drive, just in order to clean up by removing all the plastic bags!" How could I take a picture of nature with plastic bags around?"

Now all this is past; still close but yet over. Obstacles are overcome and pictures taken. The book should be ready by 14 November this year, for His Majesty's birthday. The text commenting upon the pictures will be based on quotations and proverbs. They vary from Arabic sayings to English, German and even Chinese and Russian ones. But one thing is still missing, and it is rather a problem of choice: The title. "Contrasts are huge in Jordan: the range goes from mountains to valleys, from deserts to forests, and sea to rivers, from utter haze and dust to all the colours of the rainbow; there are so many things to say in a few words!" says Zohrab with a mixture of apology (excuse) and wonder.

Nowadays, nature is Zohrab's main concern

Educational co-operation with Canada

By Heidi Taylor
Star Staff Writer

A SEVEN — member delegation from Canada visited Jordan last week as part of a four-country tour aimed at finding specific ways in which Canada can provide education and training services here.

In an interview with The Star, group leader Gary Scott explained that as a result of interest shown by Middle Eastern governments, the Canadian Department of External Affairs had brought together a broad-based group of experts to visit the region. The group included members of the government, nongovernment, and private sectors and represented a wide variety of training abilities.

Their task was two-fold: to inform people here about what Canada has to offer, and to find out where Canadian expertise could be useful. That expertise includes not only the formal, long-term education that leads to degrees and diplomas, but also the short-term on-the-job training needed, for example, in occupations affected by technological change.

Canada is of course already involved in some educational projects in the region: the United Arab Emirates is following the Canadian model in developing its community college system; the Association of Canadian Community Colleges is involved in a number of institutional co-operation projects in the Arab world.

Members of the group spoke enthusiastically about the contacts they had made, and noted that several of Canada's areas of strength in education — in the health care, petroleum and tourism industries — were areas of prime concern here as well.

Although their visit to Jordan was short, it covered a lot of ground. They began with a key meeting with Dr. Ziad Fariz, secretary general of the Ministry of Planning, who briefed the team of Jordan's comprehensive plans for National Educational Reform — plans which demonstrate clearly the priority given in the Kingdom to human resource development.

Depending on their areas of specialization, members of the group then had meetings with senior officials of the Ministries of Health, Higher Education, Tourism, and Energy, as well as the Jordan Electricity Authority and Jordan Water Authority. Other meetings included those with Al-Quds Open University, The Palestine Hospital, The Vocational Training Corporation, Princess Sarvath Community College and Mu'tah University.

Canada's interest in working more closely with Jordan appears to be mutual: Dr. Fariz and a number of senior officials will be visiting here later this month to discuss prospects of joint ventures and technology transfer projects in Jordan in co-operation with Canada. Education will be one of several aspects discussed, in addition to the areas of agriculture, energy, and telecommunications.

PHC Nurses to play key role in health care delivery

AMMAN (Star) — An extraordinary team of nurses, is now working together to carry forward Ministry of Health (MOH) plans for an improved health care training system. Nawal Haddad Shahall, project director for the Directorate of Planning, Training and Research of the MOH, is coordinating the creation of a National Institute to train both nursing tutors and nurse practitioners in primary health care (PHC) nursing.

Mrs Shahall guided site selection and preparation for the Institute which is now operating in its own building near the Jordan College of Nursing. The project is being funded with $12 million: $6.5 million from the Government and $6.5 million from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID).

Two programmes will be offered at the Institute: a nurse tutor training programme which will take its first class late in October, and a PHC nurse specialist programme scheduled to commence in 1991. Students in the tutor training programme will be prepared as teachers for the MOH colleges and schools of nursing throughout Jordan. The PHC specialist students will be recruited from among "staff" nurses who have demonstrated outstanding ability, either by completing three years of basic nursing studies in the top 10 per cent of their classes, or by recognition of their current work in the field.

Studies in PHC will make nurses expert in matters affecting mothers and children

Their studies in PHC will make them expert in matters affecting mothers and children, such as breastfeeding and proper weaning, prevention of diarrheal disease, health and nutrition education, and birth spacing and counselling. They will be trained to provide services in patients' homes with an emphasis on maternal and child health services, immunization programmes, community health development, and providing information; and Cindy Fehrs, also a graduate of Johns Hopkins.

Ms Fehrs established an infection control programme for a hospital in Saudi Arabia, and recently served as Curriculum consultant and clinical supervisor of the Irbid College of Nursing.

Curriculum design and initial instruction will be provided by a distinguished four-person team of American nurses headed by Maureen Brown. Ms Brown has 14 years experience in developing PHC programmes in such countries as Egypt, Yemen and Nepal. She holds a masters degree in Public Health from Johns Hopkins University. The other nurses are Dr Charlotte Ferguson, who recently coordinated nursing programmes for healthy delivery in 208 African countries; Penny Ann Hatcher, with degrees from Yale and Johns Hopkins, and whose experience includes work in Saudi Arabia and the family can use to maintain good health.

While the Institute is beginning operations here in Amman, some 10 Jordanian nurses will be preparing to become a faculty for the Institute. Their preparation includes a one-year programme at Johns Hopkins University designed specifically for the faculty who will train professionals in a PHC specialty.

American poet lectures on Arab Americans

AMMAN (Star) — Mr Greg Orfalea, an American poet and author of the recently published "Before the Flames: A Quest for the History of Arab Americans," will be visiting Amman 9 and 12 June under the auspices of the American Cultural Centre's Speakers Programme.

His programme in Jordan will include a lecture on "Arab Americans: A Neglected Minority Comes of Age," to be held at the American Center Library today Thursday, 9 June at 8:00 p.m. Mr Orfalea will also conduct a reading of his poetry at the American Center Library on Sunday, 12 June at 6:00 p.m. Both programmes are open to the public.

Mr Orfalea is currently editor of "Network," a newsletter distributed throughout the United States by the federal government's Small Business Administration. He has taught English language and literature at George Washington University and at Santa Barbara City College. He has given poetry readings at Lincoln Centre and the New York State Museum, and has edited and co-edited several books on Arab Americans. "Before the Flames" was nominated by the University of Texas Press for the National Book Award and will be translated into Arabic under the U.S. Information Agency's book translation programme.

Al-Mashreq and Al-Maghreb

THE EUROPEAN Economic Community (EEC) signed two agreements with some countries of North Africa (Al-Maghreb) and two other ones with some Eastern Arab countries (Al-Mashreq). The difference in those agreements is signed by the EEC with each group of countries favoured Al-Maghreb. Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria received more aid, and traditional trade channels were given boost.

The geographical proximity was a major factor. Yet the implementation of the "One Europe" act in late 1992 may pose a threat to the economies of Al-Maghreb countries. When the eleven European countries become virtually one economic market Al-Maghreb countries stand to lose most in time of trade flows, employment opportunities and investments from Europe. The Al-Maghreb countries have begun taking certain steps to act as one group in face of that 1992 date. If Algeria and Morocco succeed in resolving their dispute over the Sahara and Libya found its reconciliation path, the Al-Maghreb can work out a unified stand. Tunisia is playing an active moderating and conciliatory role which is certain to pay-off handsomely for all.

Al-Mashreq countries (Syria, Lebanon and Jordan) have not yet taken any steps to mitigate the possible ill-effects on their economies by 1992. On the other hand, the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) is currently engaged in slow and painstaking negotiations with the EEC, with petrochemicals constituting the major impediment towards the conclusion of an agreement.

Relatively speaking, Europe will eventually come to terms, and both EEC and GCC will find a way to cooperate with any party keen not to lose the other; that is a way out of the current impasse. This whole topic of relations between EEC and the different Arab regions requires preparation and careful planning from now. Otherwise, (92) will be another bad year for the Arab.

The second paper was presented by Dr Nizam Abu-Hijleh who pointed out the different forms of psychological disturbances such as: hysteria, Paranoia, and Psycho-leurosis. He revealed the possibility of inheriting a disorder genetically. "We do not choose to have these problems, we have no control over ourselves in this area."

Dr Al-Fanek,

Committee on exchange rates unneeded

AMMAN (Star) — Commenting on the decision taken by the government to form a committee to establish the basis for foreign exchange guidelines, Dr Fahd Al-Fanek, a well-known Jordanian economist, said that he finds no reason for forming such a committee because it indicates that officials cannot handle the problems and find solutions on their own.

In an interview with Ad-Dustour daily newspaper, he said that the aforementioned case is more than technical, but it handles the financial policy of the government.

Moreover, Dr Al-Fanek does not approve of the membership of this committee, which consists of officials and businessmen. As for the officials, he said that they could have solved the problem without this committee. On the other hand, the businessmen should not know the trends of the government more than other businessmen. In other words, this would affect the competition in the market between different financial institutions.

Dr Al-Fanek added that the government should have asked for memos from those who could help, rather than forming a committee for discussion and rallying support for various trends.

He added, that the solutions are far beyond the authorities of the committee because it cannot change the financial policy behind the crisis.

As for the solution for the exchange and economic crisis and the protection of the Jordanian dinar, Dr Al-Fanek has a few suggestions:

1) Increasing or floating the interest rates on the JD in order to maintain a reasonable level of JD deposits.

(2) Fixing a new equivalent price for the JD to equal two units of the Special Drawing Rights (SDR), provided that the Central Bank (CBJ) defends this price and obliges all financial institutions to announce their exchange prices on condition that the difference would not exceed two per cent of the CBJ price.

3) Limiting the amount allocated to serve foreign debts that it does not exceed the surplus of the total balance of payment.

(4) Decreasing the public expenditures including the salaries by one per cent monthly for 12 months.

(5) Postponing all the projects of purchasing big imported equipment, including all tenders of the Ministry of Natural Resources, the Telecommunication Corp., the Royal Jordanian Airlines, and big road construction projects.

(6) Effecting a high-level tour to Iraq to convince them to pay their obligations.

(7) Convincing the Arab oil countries to keep paying their aids to Jordan.

Concerning the interest rates, Dr Al-Fanek said that he is bored with official statements claiming to increase interest rates elasticity. The only elasticity prevailing is not following the rules by some people as witnessed in the local market, he added.

As for transforming financial

companies to investment banks. Dr Al-Fanek commented that he does not oppose the idea if it is just a matter of calling. However, if it is more than that, he refuses any surprises contradicting the law or the licence conditions of financial and real estate companies.

Iraq Jordan Co. to produce detergents

AMMAN (Petra) — The Iraqi Jordanian Industrial company started its first project with the detergent industry with a production power of 60,000 tonnes annually.

Mr Mohammed Al-Sagqaf, under secretary of the Ministry of Industry and Trade and vice chairman of the Board of Directors of the company, stated that the production will depend on raw materials produced in both countries and no import would be allowed except for materials absent from the local markets.

He added that the company based in Baghdad, would cover 50 per cent of the Iraqi market demands while the rest would be insured through private companies in Iraq and Jordan.

British films at the RCC

THIS YEAR'S British Film Week (currently being held at the Royal Cultural Centre) presents five very different films. The selection includes historical subjects, comedy and a thriller showing the range of themes covered by the British film industry of the 1980s.

The week started off last Monday with the great award-winning film "The Mission" directed by Roland Joffe and starring Robert De Niro and Jeremy Irons. A production of 1986, the film is set in the South American jungle of the 1950's.

The central ingredient of the film is the tension between the servants of the church represented by the Jesuits and the authority of the church represented by the Cardinal. "The Mission" is memorable for its great performances as well as for its spectacular cinematography and fascinating musical score.

The second film of the week was "Defence of the Realm," a political thriller shot in "film noir" style. Directed by David Drury and starring Gabriel Byrne and Denholm Elliott, the film exposes a political scandal that results in the resignation of a politician and makes the reputation of young journalist. The film, produced in 1985, is an uncompromising critique of certain aspects of contemporary British life.

In a much lighter vein ran Wednesday's film "Coast to Coast" a genuinely funny comedy starring Britain's great comedian Lenny Henry. A BBC production of 1987, directed by Sandy Johnson, the film is about a Liverpool man who wishes he was American advertising for a business partner to run a mobile disco and ending up with a white American who wishes he was black. The film is punctuated with pop hits which comment on the action as well as punctuate it.

Tonight's film (Thursday 9 June) is "Greystoke," the legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes. A 1984 production, directed by Hugh Hudson, the film stars Ralph Richardson, Christopher Lambert (as Tarzan) and Ian Holm. Quite an interesting and unusual film, "Greystoke" tells the "real" story of Tarzan who is not the same breast-beating Hollywood stereotype that is familiar to most film viewers. This Tarzan is both humanely and movingly portrayed, especially as he is being disillusioned with what he sees of civilization and ends up back in the jungle.

Ending the British Film Week is one that featured largely on this year's Oscar nomination list: "Hope and Glory" scheduled for screening on Saturday 11 June. A very recent 1987 production, directed by John Boorman and starring Sebastian Rice Edwards and Sarah Miles, this poignant film is set in a suburb of London during World War II. It shows the progress of a nine-year-old boy towards maturity against the background of the Blitz when the family home is destroyed by fire. All events are shown through both the subjectivity of the boy as he sees things happen, and the remembering process of the narrator.

THE JERUSALEM STAR

By N.K. Chakrabarti
Special to The Star

For long, been an ardent fan of C. Northcote Parkinson, the propounder of several theories which have come to be known as Parkinson's Laws. Parkinson is a famous man; I have known, even inside my country. There is hardly a comparison. It was only a chance event that led me to the foot-steps of Parkinson. And that was in the domain of law on travel.

The year 1987 happened to be Silver Jubilee anniversary of our marriage. We, my wife and I, had been living in Jordan and being located as we were, nearly midway between India and Europe, we thought it would be a good idea to celebrate the anniversary with a trip to England and mainland Europe.

We decided on a three-week holiday, and to join a tour, from England, lasting about ten days, to visit a few cities in Western Europe.

And here starts our tale of the trip.

I had read Parkinson's law on travel many years ago. But two observations therefrom still stuck in my memory. They were:

1. By the time you fill up all the travel documents with their multiplicity of questions, you are a thoroughly tired man. You will be left with hardly any energy to undertake the tour.

2. The various forms with a plethora of questions that you may be asked to fill in the process, may seem as irrelevant as "How many children do you have and why?"

One would be inclined to think that the above two observations were dropped in a time of hyperbole. But my experience subsequently proved that Parkinson was one hundred per cent right.

The first step was procuring visas for the several countries that we intended to visit. The following countries were under consideration: UK, Belgium, France, West Germany, Switzerland and Austria.

The first hurdle was to trace the location of the embassies. Some could be traced at present locations, like the British Embassy situated on the Third Ring in Amman. For some others it was a wild goose chase. Moving from one place to another. We learned that the German Embassy was located at the Hotel InterContinental. It was told that the consulate section had moved to the Hala. The German Embassy was asked after a good deal of search but its consulate section had already shifted to the Amra. As every Jordanian in Amman knows, all important establishments are located at a circular, vanishing entity — being gradually replaced by residential crossings with traffic lights — the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th having already been axed). Such an address can be as elusive as an address without an address.

Now started the real drama — the act of obtaining visas from the embassies. It was the British Embassy to start with, as Britain was to be our base for further movements. The forms were obtained without much difficulty — each form having 2 sheets and 4 had to answer questions numbered 1 to 30, while the subsidiary principal applicant, accompanying applicants, had to answer questions 1 to 17. The questions therein fully vindicated

The Chakrabartis make it to the lofty peak of Mount Titlis

In Parkinson's footsteps

One question was — "What is the number and age of children not accompanying you?" The relevance of this question was totally baffling. Other questions included:

1. Expected date of arrival in UK
2. Address in UK — including hotel accommodation, if any
3. Whether the applicant has a return journey ticket — whether the return reservation has been done or whether it is an open ticket.
4. How much money the applicant would be carrying on his person for his expenses in UK at the time of arrival.

In the sequence of events, one would not like to book a hotel accommodation in a foreign country without making sure that one would eventually obtain a visa. But that is exactly what the question in the form expects of you. The amount of money that a person would carry for his expenses abroad is, I thought, his own concern. To ask a person the exact quantum of money that he would be carrying is — as it appears to me — derogatory to human dignity. But, alas! similar silly questions appear in most visa application forms of West European countries.

The filling of the forms took quite a bit of time and endeavour. As instructed on the forms, I answered numbers 1 - 30; my wife answered numbers 1-17. But when the two application forms were presented at the counter, the person at the counter politely stated that even for my wife, a subsidiary applicant, answers to question numbers 18-30 had to be filled. I pointed out to him the instructions on the top page — and that I had complied with the instructions. But he continued with his insistence and sweet persuasion; I had to yield.

Last but not the least, the visa fees. Earlier, in 1983, when I was travelling abroad for the first time, I was in the Railway Ministry in India and had a diplomatic passport. Having come to Jordan through a company (Rites), I had had to surrender my diplomatic passport and settle for an official passport. The official passport made no impression on the consular officials — who insisted on my paying full visa fees — as I was going on a private visit. Not even the rates applicable for commonwealth countries were to be invoked.

The logic was pretty sound — hard to contradict. I paid visa fees at normal rates of JD 22 per passport for multiple entry. Nobody, in my opinion, should grudge such apparently high visa fees because after all it should be reasonable to expect that a country should identify additional sources of income after the loss of an empire where the sun never used to set.

Our search for the embassy locations took us to the Belgian Embassy which we discovered with a certain elation, the like of which Columbus felt on discovering America. The elation, however, was short lived. The embassy was closed. We tried our luck again the next day. The security guard at the gate showed us a wrong door, as we discovered later. A lady came out, with apparent annoyance wrote large on her face. She indicated to me that the Consulate section of the embassy was in the other wing of the building.

I was, however, not to be given the visa application forms till I could produce two letters, one from the Indian Embassy and the other from my employer in Jordan. She had no patience even to listen to me. I found the behaviour rather repulsive and gave up the idea of any further dealing with this embassy. Instead, I asked an acquaintance of mine in Amman to procure for me, from the Dutch Consulate application forms for visas for Benelux countries. It was a strange irony of fate that we spent our first night of our tour of mainland Europe in Brussels, whose resplendent evening appearance made us forget the repulsive behaviour of their embassy official in Amman.

We had to complete three copies each of the Benelux application. After a good deal of struggling we filled the forms and appeared at the reception counter of the Dutch Consulate.

In Paris' Place de la Concorde

The girl manning the reception counter said:

"We don't issue any visas here. Why don't you go to the Belgian Embassy?"

It was too much nonsense to gulp from a girl who would be about the age of my daughter back home.

I said, "If you are not issuing visas, what is the consulate here for? Why, in that case, do you not close the consulate? Besides, I collected the forms through somebody only three days back. The person collecting the forms was told that the applications were to be submitted along with three passport-size photographs for each applicant, fee of JD 4.75 for each passport and a recommendation letter from the Indian Embassy. After having said all this, it is too late in the day to say that you do not issue visas."

Since I would not relent, she decided to pass on her problem to her Assistant Consular Officer. We were presented to him. In a refreshing and welcome change, the officer, a Jordanian, was considerate and sympathetic. More than anything else, he spoke good English; and that made communication easier. He accepted our application forms and said he would send a telex to the Netherlands seeking permission to issue our visas. We were asked to check back after a few days.

When we met the Assistant Consular Officer again some days later he said that a reply to the telex had not come (I still wonder whether a telex was really necessary if it was ever sent) but nevertheless he was convinced about my bonafides as a tourist and I would get my visas.

I interjected to doubly reassure him that at my age (running 55) it was too late in the day to seek a job in a foreign country and that I was quite happy in my motherland which one Indian poet had described as "Sareh Jahan se achcha Hindustan Hamara" (My country India, the best in the world).

The visas were issued. The Assistant Consular Officer wished me a happy stay in Benelux countries. I do not recollect the name of this officer, but may his tribe increase.

The most pleasant experience was obtaining visas for France, though the questions to be answered were not that easy. One of the questions required you to recall, with precision, the address and duration of your last stay in France. The consulate required only a letter of recommendation from the Indian Embassy, and did not charge any visa fee either. The visas were granted, with plural entries allowing an overall stay of thirty days, and was valid for a period of one year from the date of issue. This was a generous visa by all standards.

The paradox of the situation was that on all the three days I visited the consular section of the French Embassy there were only a handful of takers of French visa as compared to the large crowd noticed in British Embassy, despite the high visa fees.

For logistical reasons, being located more than 200 kms away from Amman, I entrusted the visa procurement for West Germany to a colleague of mine who was staying in the Amra Hotel, a few feet away from where the consulate is located. The visa was obtained without

Congratulations to Naim Al-Hourani and Su'ad Muhammad Ibrahim, whose wedding took place late last month 12 June, 1988 during the Philippine Evening at the Plaza. The candidates are Judith Mendigo and Erma Moral, Annie Castro, Digna Macatangay.

In the party the highlight of the night is the "Santacruzan" portion. This is a Philippine tradition celebrated nationwide in the Philippines. In towns and cities, young ladies represent biblical or mythical heroines in candlelit processions in the streets. This celebration is based on the search of Empress Helena and Prince Constantine for the Holy Cross. Every year, the town's or city's fairest of maidens grace the occasion, which on the night of the party is the Miss Filipino Community 1988.

During a reception held last Wednesday at the French Embassy residence, Ambassador Patrick Leclercq presented decorations in the "Ordre des Arts et Lettres" to former minister of information, culture, tourism and antiquities, Mohammed Al-Khatib, Secretary General of the Ministry of Tourism, Nasri Attallah, and Mira Khoury, from the same ministry.

The decorations were bestowed upon them by the French government for their contribution in the organization of the exhibition "The Kings' Highway, 8000 years of Art in Jordan" which took place in Paris during the winter 1986/87 and was an outstanding success, attracting tens of thousands visitors who discovered both the exceptional richness of Jordan's archaeological heritage and contemporary aspects of life in the Kingdom.

Congratulations are due to lawyers Iman Abu-Zaid and Mohammed El-Rashdan. These two just got engaged and celebrated the event with a cosy family do. The wedding will be in two or three months time — Mabrouk once again.

The American Women of Amman held their Silver Jubilee Birthday Tea Monday afternoon in the ballroom of the Marriott Hotel to celebrate 25 years of friendship and service to the Jordanian community.

To entertain the membership and special guests, Mama Witch made a cameo appearance, the AWA Playreading Group performed, several AWA members presented a medley of songs and the Jazz Band from the American Community School played Happy Birthday to the delight of everyone present.

Among the special guests attending the afternoon celebration were Her Royal Highness Princess Basma, several wives of ambassadors and the presidents of local women's organizations.

Anyone looking for news should have stopped by the Plaza Hotel on Tuesday night where Reuters news agency Editor in Chief Michael Reupke was hosting a reception. Reupke was in Amman for a Reuters Middle East editorial conference that brought together the company's Chief News Editor Ian MacDowell, Editor Middle East Graham Stewart, Editor Asia Alex Frere, Editor Arabic Services Assem Hassan together with bureau chiefs and correspondents from throughout the Middle East, including of course Amman Bureau Chief Alastair Lyon.

Tuesday's reception gave the journalists a chance to meet leading figures in Jordanian government and business life including Central Bank Governor Huseyn Kaelim, Civil Service Commission head Ibrahim Izzadine and Housing Bank Chairman Zuhair Khoury. The diplomatic corps was well represented by Soviet Ambassador Alexander Zinchuk, Australian Ambassador Terry Goggin, Swedish Ambassador Lars Lonnback and Pakistani Ambassador.

A group of Reuters "retirees" were also invited for the conference. The six ex-staffers Khader Nassar, Izzat Shukri, Edmond Khleif, Ali Murad, Waflaq Alwal and Elias Nawas have all given the company thirty or more years of service so, while the current staff were busy sorting out questions of editorial policy, they were content to remember the old days, renew acquaintances and enjoy the culinary delights of Jordan.

Twenty five intermediate students from the Amman Baccalaureate School performed efficiently in presenting the Arabic play "Al-Muftah" (The Key) in the school theatre last Saturday and Sunday.

The play, directed by drama teacher Hala Khoury, took two months of preparation and hard work. The theme was the importance of fighting in achieving one's goal in life, with persistence and determination.

Skin care — the natural way

By Hind-Lara Mango
Social to The Star

HAND HAS always relied a great deal on plants not only for food but for medicine as well. However, as technology has progressed we have begun to rely more and more on synthetic rather than natural products. Many of these manufactured products are more convenient and contain preservatives that keep them "fresh" longer.

Not everyone is convinced that the synthetics are best, of course. Now many people have begun to be concerned about health and fitness, and with using natural products.

People are now taking more care of the appearance of their skin, says Silvana Hovakimian, a Russian skin specialist working in Amman. Natural foods and products are in demand now more than ever. In the Soviet Union all skin specialists use herbs and plants for the treatment of the skin.

The majority of the people that Hovakimian treats suffer from skin problems. These problems affect adolescents in particular, for this is the age when skin is affected by hormones secreted by the sex glands. More body oil is released, pores become larger, and blackheads, blocked pores and pimples result.

She warns against the use of harsh chemicals on the sensitive skin of the face (sensitive because the capillaries are close to the surface). The effects of these may not be noticeable until five years after use.

"It is all right to use alcohol, but in very small percentages. What you find today in many treatments are alcohol concentrations as high as 60 per cent and more. These products may clear the face of blemishes temporarily, but they do not penetrate the infected cells, so the spots will reappear," she says. A facial medication containing 20 per cent alcohol can give good results but at a slower pace, and will be much safer.

Perfumes, which are high in alcohol, should not be used on the face, as they can damage sensitive skin.

Another harmful product is the antibiotic. Today dermatologists can control 80 per cent of all acne cases by the use of these drugs. However, they suppress the process rather than cure it. As a result, treatment has to be continued for a long time, under medical supervision, with the possibility of side effects.

Hovakimian finds that her Jordanian clients have either oily or dry skin — two extremes with no intermediate stages. This is because of our dry climate, the high concentration of chlorine in the water (which dries the skin and increases the amount of facial hair) and the nature of Middle Eastern food.

You can always tell if someone is eating the right sort of food by the colour and look of the complexion. You are what you eat, and therefore your skin reflects your eating patterns. A simple rule is: if your skin is oily eat a minimum of sugary and fatty foods; if your skin is dry eat dairy products, nuts, and natural vegetable oil.

Hovakimian notes that there is a great tendency in Jordan to eat a lot of red meat, sweets, and greasy food. Beware those of you who have been eating kettayef and kenafteh after 11-tar! Your diet should include a lot of vegetables and fruits. She also recommends drinking as much as four litres of water every day.

Try to avoid or cut down on coffee, which discolours the skin, and cigarettes, which cause wrinkles.

One of the natural products used in skin treatments is honey. This is used for removing blackheads and is also useful in helping to reduce freckles. Spread about 30 grams of honey on your face and leave it on for half an hour. Afterwards, wash it off with herbal tea.

Most people think that freckles are beautiful, but if you don't agree Hovakimian has a recipe for you. Combine equal quantities of lemon juice, whole wheat flour, honey, and powdered sea shells. This concoction is left on your face for one hour. If you have an abundant supply of courage you can sleep with this on your face.

You can also protect your skin by reducing exposure to the sun. If you must get that tan make sure to start with very short tanning sessions and to use protective creams — Hovakimian recommends those with avocado and grapefruit bases.

To clean your face the skin specialist advises using cleansing milks, tonics, and moisturizers. She is very generous with her formulae; here is one that can be used after washing your face, to clean the pores more deeply.

Fill a jar 20 per cent full of alcohol. Add a large quantity of scented flower petals (eg. roses, carnations, lavender). Top up with mineral water. Cover with a dark cloth and leave it in a dark place for 22 days. Then filter and store in the refrigerator for use.

Hovakimian treats a case of enlarged pores with a mineral mask and flower petals

Here's another remedy, this time for tired and puffy eyes. Swab the eyes with cotton dipped in hot and then cold camomile. This puts the blood circulation into action. Then lie with your head lower than the rest of the body for two minutes. This is followed by a slice of cucumber on each eye for five minutes, and then a mixture of yoghurt and egg yolks is smoothed under each eye and left for 15 minutes. While you are waiting remember that it is said that you have to suffer to be beautiful.

Hovakimian stresses that most skin problems will respond to treatment, either at home or with a specialist's care. But most important is the treatment you give from the inside — a healthy body gives you glowing, beautiful skin.

Following Parkinson

much difficulty, for a single entry, and a normal visa fee of around JD 5 per passport was charged.

After a lot of searching we located the Swiss Embassy which could be located. The first visit was only to collect the forms and information about the things that have to accompany a completed application form.

My second visit to the Swiss Embassy was on a day sometime in the middle of June 87. It was between 13:00 and 13:30. I had with me: completed application forms, recent photographs, valid passports, and air tickets from Amman to London and back.

I presented all the papers. I also told the consular officials that I wanted to take a coach tour from England to Europe and back. By now, I had in my passport a multiple entry visa for UK endorsed.

One of the consular officials asked me why I had not by then taken French and German visas. I showed him my application forms for those countries which were yet to be submitted. At that point between 13:00 and 13:30 only the Swiss Embassy was open. The other two, French and German consular sections had closed down by 12:30. I also explained to him that I was coming away. He would not relent. He advised me to come to the Swiss Embassy only after obtaining French and German visas. I had no choice.

By now, I had learnt a new lesson, though a queer one. I had to obtain visas in the sequence of my proposed tour. For reasons entirely beyond my control, my tour took me to France after I had visited Switzerland. However, I was forced to take a French visa before that of Switzerland. For the grave act of indiscretion of breaking the sequence, committed for reasons entirely beyond my control, do I owe an apology to the Swiss Embassy in Amman? Does the security of Europe and its people get seriously jeopardised if visas are obtained in one sequence and tourists utilise them in another?

A bus tour to celebrate 25 years of marriage days as all the papers had to be forwarded to Austria.

We decided to call it a day; we opted to cut out Austria, the land of "Sound of Music" from our itinerary. The exercise of getting visas was getting too much of a burden to bear.

It is no small consolation that in this human life wounds heal rather quickly. By the time we arrived at the airport to leave we had forgotten our trials and tribulations of the visa-getting ordeal. We were in high spirits, looking forward to the tour.

Our non-stop flight from Amman to London was fairly comfortable, except the occasional annoyance caused by the presence of three flies in our aircraft. I envied them. They did not have to purchase air tickets, did not have to go through the tension of confirmation and reconfirmation of their tickets. And above all, they did not require a visa for whichever country they were heading to.

While moving through immigration at London's Heathrow airport, I had to answer several searching questions despite laying bare the fact that I had arrived in that country as a tourist, for a limited stay of 3-4 weeks. I had to say when I expected to return, whether I had to say when I expected to return whether I had a job in Jordan and etc. It appeared as if a report had been lodged against me in the police station and I was being questioned as a prime suspect. I had a similar experience with immigration at Dover while returning from Europe.

Our coach tour to Europe and back from U.K. was pleasant and memorable, thanks to Global Tours who chalked out the tour to meticulous details. Some of the countries that we passed through did not bother at all to check our passports or visas; some others checked them only at one point, entry or exit. And this, after all the rigmarole of visa procurement.

All the ordeal that accompanies the visa procurement is experienced largely by people from third world countries, more particularly the poorer ones.

With improvement in transport and communications, the world is becoming progressively a smaller place to live in. Unless we move around the world and meet each other we shall continue to remain like the proverbial frog in the well, unaware of the existence of the ocean outside. Let us hope that in the days to come the enthusiasm of a few people from the third world, like us, will not be stifled and inhibited by more questions in the visa forms, logical or irrelevant, more visa fees, and more harassment by heartless consular officials taking recourse to trivial excuses.

Why not make this planet a little more livable and lovable with a little more human compassion and consideration?

A summit for solidarity

Amid signs of heightened optimism, Arab leaders began their extraordinary summit in Algiers Tuesday with the aim of assisting the Palestinian people in their heroic uprising, against continued Israeli occupation. His Majesty King Hussein's tribute to the uprising in his speech before the summit, reflects the feelings of pride that Arabs everywhere harbour in their hearts regarding the noble popular uprising in the occupied Arab lands, which has just entered its seventh month.

It is indeed quite significant that the extraordinary (Intifadah) summit is held in Algeria, the country of the million martyrs who sacrificed their lives in defence of their country's independence and to safeguard the honour and dignity of the whole Arab nation.

The Palestinians are now engaged in a similar movement to regain their legitimate rights and to rid their lands of the traces of occupation. The martyrs of the Algerian revolution have set the example, not only for the current popular uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza, but also for all peace-loving nations all over the world.

Jordan's commitment to support the heroic uprising has been steady and continuous from the beginning, and this commitment was renewed by King Hussein in his address before the Arab summit. Jordan also made it clear on numerous occasions that it would not be a substitute for the Palestine Liberation Organization in peace negotiations, but would agree to attend an international peace conference on the Middle East in a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation if all parties agree.

The Algiers summit comes in the wake of the Amman extraordinary summit that paved the way for reconciliation and understanding among all Arab countries. This new spirit of solidarity and cohesion among the Arab countries, which was ushered in here in Amman, the capital of Arab reconciliation, is the corner-stone in any bid to arrive at an over-all Arab consensus to support the just and legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people.

The Arab people everywhere have their eyes turned towards Algiers, hoping that the Arab leaders could indeed agree on practical measures to support the heroic uprising in the occupied Arab lands, and to put an end to the aggressive Israeli occupation with its inhuman practices.

Shultz's fourth mission

US Secretary of State George Shultz concluded his fourth tour in the region apparently without achieving a breakthrough with the Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who still adamantly rejects the internationally-accepted formula of holding an international peace conference to settle the Arab-Israeli conflict on the basis of the exchange of land for peace.

Shamir's intransigence and unwillingness to budge prompted Shultz to make gloomy comments about his mission. He nevertheless declined to make any threats against those who have deliberately hampered the peace mission or offer promises to those who expressed willingness to accept honourable balanced settlement.

As a result, the Middle East might be heading again to the deadly state of stalemate which has been plaguing the region for the past few years.

At the start of his mission, the US Secretary of State released statements about the basics of a solution to the Middle East problem which were viewed in the Arab world as a crucial turning point in the US approach to the Arab-Israeli conflict. His assertions about the need to exchange land for peace and about the necessity of fulfilling the legitimate political aspirations of the Palestinian people raised hopes that the US administration was about to take serious steps to force Israel to concede to the basic requirements of a just and comprehensive peace settlement in the region.

Instead, and as has been the case in the past, Shamir stubbornly maintained his adamant opposition to the American peace overtures, knowing in advance that his government is safe against any effective US pressure.

From the very beginning, it became clear that if any US peace bid in the Middle East is to succeed, it first needs to respond positively to the legitimate Arab demands and secondly, pressure should be exercised on Israel to bring about a drastic change in the Israeli attitude towards the peace process. The carrot policy which the United States has been adopting in its relations with Israel has not only utterly failed but also caused successive disasters in the volatile region. The current situation in the Middle East is extremely explosive and dangerous, with new stockpiles of nuclear and chemical weapons added to the arsenal of the combatants. The future looks, stern and bleak and it is not the Middle East alone that will be affected if a new explosion occurs. To avoid the looming catastrophe, the Reagan administration should devote the remaining six months of the president's second term to ceaseless action to achieve the long-cherished solution.

The 'perfect doctor'

To the editor:

I READ with interest some of the recommendations taken from the treatise on the "perfect patient" by Dr Paul Feldman and Sharon Covington which appeared in The Star, volume 6 number 40, and would like to comment about the doctor-patient relationship as seen by a "perfect patient" or perhaps a not so "perfect patient."

In my view, before the patient can be the perfect patient, the doctor should be the "perfect doctor." Although I have the advantage of an education, I still find communication with the doctor difficult and at times almost impossible. Undergoing a major surgery recently, I approached my not so perfect but nevertheless famous doctor and queried him about the operation that he was about to perform on me. I was very apprehensive and fearful, but I found his reaction bland, dull, and uninformative. I asked no questions, he offered no information.

I think that the doctor, as a professional, should always try to put himself in the patient's position. Many patients are in pain, in need of medical help and reluctant to have their personal privacy invaded. They are often faced with the busy, uncaring and distant attitude of the doctor who hastily rushes in to see the overworked patient and then hastily rushes out again with little or no explanation to the patient himself about what is happening to him.

I blame some of this remote relationship on the doctor because he is given too much power and the patient too little. His American counterparts are more careful with their patient relationships because they know that a good relationship will enhance a better business. Incompetent doctors fear being sued. A good American doctor will be seen consulting and informing the patient about the disease that the patient has. If the patient asks a few questions, he will most often find that the doctor will give him a detailed explanation of his particular case.

A better doctor-patient relationship could be of much advantage here in our country.

Also, the attitude of the doctor and the hospital staff makes a big difference in the recovery of the patient while in the hospital. Too often secretaries and nurses are brusque and have little or no personal concern for the patient's feelings.

If the doctor is going to be a truly good doctor, and especially so as a Muslim doctor, he will put himself at the patient's level and treat him foremost as an equal human being. His attitude will give the patient the opportunity to relax and feel he is in capable, qualified hands. He must inform the patient about his condition and, if an operation is needed, be told the advantages, disadvantages and side effects, if any.

Al-Razi was a doctor who believed that patients should be treated with kindness and understanding. He is the first doctor in the world to use psychology with medicine and felt that, if the patient were to be permanently cured, his mind must also be considered and "healed" in the process.

The "perfect doctor" must have mercy towards his patient as a fellow human being as well as financially. The patient's sole purpose in life is not to make the doctor rich, but the sole purpose in the doctor's life, medically speaking, should be to make his patient well.

The "perfect doctor" should also care about having a cheerful nurse as well as an immaculate clinic. "Cleanliness is part of Faith." More patients should protest to the doctors and medical staff if their treatment is poor or inadequate, and while we must encourage the patient to be "perfect," we must first insist that the doctor be more "perfect" and professional in his attitude.

It is he who must educate the patient. Committees should be established to better ensure the rights of the patient while he is undergoing treatment by the "perfect doctor."

What about the pedestrians?

To the editor:

THE RECENT openings of the two new interchanges have certainly made things easier for drivers. The traffic moves quickly and smoothly — and in the direction you want to go. But what about the pedestrians? The new route passes through a densely populated area; this was evident throughout the construction phase by the number of people crossing through the site at all times of the day.

It appears, however, that pedestrians have been totally disregarded in the plans. Access to the Ministry of the Interior is problematic; sidewalks — if they are completed — are too narrow. Worse, there is not a single safe place to cross the road from the overhead crossing at the University of Jordan right down to Firas Circle, Jabel Al-Husseini.

Guilio Andreotti

A lifetime of diplomacy

By Miriam Blanco
Special to The Star

ROMA — Italy's relations with the Arab and Islamic world are perhaps unique in Europe. Located right in the centre of the Mediterranean between northern Europe and the Arab world, Italy has established trading links with the Arab world and the lands beyond for ancient times. Rome is nearer to the East than it is to Paris.

Today, Italy is pro-Arab, commercially-oriented and pursues relations in its pragmatic interests: prosperity rather than rhetoric is what really counts. Scores of oil and major contracts held by Italian companies in the Middle East are of prime concern to the Roman policymakers. At the same time, however, Italy is a staunch supporter of the NATO alliance and collaborates with the United States on major East-West issues.

The result is that Italy follows two distinct lines of thought. Italian foreign policy, inherited in the power games between city states during the Renaissance, is as free from moralizing as it is from prejudice. It is encapsulated in the person of Guilio Andreotti, 69, twice prime minister and the current foreign minister of Italy.

Member of the centre-right Christian Democratic party, Andreotti views Italy as a bridge between Europe and the East, the protagonist of a foreign policy that has its historical roots in central and southern Italy, as opposed to the country's north, where the new wealth of the service sector, financial and banking houses and the stock market is being created.

Andreotti's wisdom lies in the idea that Italy will still be dealing in the Levant long after the crisis managers have disappeared, and moved troops to the next viable spot. Since 1978, Andreotti personally has resisted moves to isolate Lebanon and instead, managed to forge an agreement for the protection of Italian citizens working in Libya.

So far, the Italians have pursued their policy with skill. No Alitalia airliners have been hijacked. There is known to be only one Italian hostage in Lebanon — Alberto Molinari, an Italian businessman resident in Beirut for 20 years, who disappeared on 11 September, 1985. The Italian contingent in the United Nations peacekeeping force acquitted itself well in Beirut after the 1982 Israeli invasion and withdrawal. Italian businessmen work throughout the Middle East with relative ease.

Against Italy's advantages he compares the dilemmas of the major foreign power in the Middle East. "In my view, the present day responsibilities of the United States toward the rest of the world do not make a radical change of policy every four years permissible," he says, with the US elections in mind. In his collection of sketches of "both famous and infamous" figures, published by Sidgwick and Jackson.

Then he asks, in apparent response to criticism of Italy's policy of alleged appeasement of Arab countries, "Is it really a waste of time to try to find points of contact in this madly turbulent world? Who gains from the isolation of (Qad-hafi)? Did we not receive recognition from (British Prime Minister Margaret) Thatcher of the usefulness of our presence in Tripoli for protecting British interest after diplomatic relations with Libya were broken off?"

It is the combination of Andreotti's success and experience in the forefront of Italian political life that makes his recollections of many major figures of the last 40 years so fascinating. With a detached irony, he describes some of the foibles of people from Mrs Thatcher and Ronald Reagan to the late Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi of Iran, Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt and Indira Gandhi of India, Emperor Hirohito of Japan, Cuban leader Fidel Castro, Uganda's deposed strongman Idi Amin and Qadhafi.

He recalls a piece of advice given to "Time" magazine for an article on Reagan's proposed visit to Italy in 1982: "Remember America's real friends are the ones who don't worry about whether the President is a Republican or a Democrat; and beware of flatterers who will try and ingratiate themselves by speaking ill of some of your predecessors."

Of Mrs Thatcher, he says: "For the tragic Argentine attack on the Falkland Islands had caused her to clad herself entirely in armour, as the coal miners and other British trade union groups were to discover to their cost."

Retaining his sense of humour to the end, Andreotti quotes Reagan's definition of the Iron Lady as "the strongest man to be found in the United Kingdom."

It is hard to see Andreotti's sketches of the leaders past and present as the final word from a senior diplomat still in office, but he does leave ample room for thought.

Above all, Andreotti leaves the impression that any overall assessment of Italian foreign policy must acknowledge the reaches of its sophisticated diplomacy. In the absence of serious Western leadership, a doctrine such as the one held by Andreotti still functions.

At least a quarter of a million people will die in the next few decades due to external exposure to gamma radiation alone. To be fair, there have been earnest attempts made since the accident to establish an early warning system that will allow neighbouring countries to evacuate populations and take preventive measures against a fallout. The IAEA Convention on Early Notification of Nuclear Accidents was signed by 51 states within six months of the Chernobyl accident. But critics have attacked the treaty because of what they consider to be significant loopholes and escape routes.

For example, it is left to the judgment of the government of a country where a nuclear accident occurs to decide whether the fallout will harm the neighbouring countries. There is no requirement either for the publication of information supplied or received by a country about a nuclear accident.

Critics fear that this major flaw in the convention may encourage countries in the fallout path to conceal information, as several west European governments actually did after Chernobyl. Most European governments have a stake in making nuclear power "look good." Of the 26 countries that depend on nuclear power for electricity generation, 18 are in Europe. One outcome of the Chernobyl accident has been the increased lobbying by the nuclear industry.

The visible human consequences of the accident have been lighter in Europe than initially assumed, strengthening the nuclear lobby's arguments in favour of continuing with most nuclear power programmes. The economic cost of Chernobyl, which is believed by independent experts to be colossal, Chernobyl remains very much a business unfinished.

The mostly-needed breakthrough

THE MOSCOW summit has apparently created a favourable atmosphere for closer co-operation between the two superpowers in many fields of bilateral interest. President Ronald Reagan returned to Washington Saturday declaring that he was exhilarated by his meetings with Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Moscow retorted with the same jubilant tone as if old enmity and hectic rivalry of the past have finally been buried.

Although the summit may have not achieved concrete results in terms of definite agreements, its greatest achievement has been the trust it has generated between the two peoples and their leaderships. The Soviets and Americans now trust and even like each other at a scale never reached before.

During his four-day stay in the Soviet Union, President Reagan found out that the "evil empire" is not really that evil and that the Soviets aspire for real peace and do not seek confrontation. On the other hand, the policy of openness initiated by Gorbachev and Reagan's historic visit made the Soviets far less hostile to Americans and more prepared to embark on a new era of joint action to improve East-West relations.

The rapprochement brought about between the two superpowers by the Moscow summit, however, cannot last and prosper if its positive results are kept confined within the narrow circle of US-Soviet relations. The improvement can survive and flourish when other persistent problems of the world find satisfactory solutions through joint US-Soviet co-operation and in accordance with international legitimacy.

The Geneva accord on Afghanistan, for instance, has made the road to the Moscow summit easy and comfortable. Afghanistan offered an example on how a solution to a regional problem can greatly improve the international climate and lead to a better superpower understanding.

The Middle East, which has been beset by a series of devastating wars and enormous human suffering for more than forty years, is an area which needs to be given absolute priority by the superpowers in their endeavour to reinstate justice, and the agony of the oppressed and halt the arrogance of the oppressor. It is also a region whose conflict can easily develop into a world-wide conflagration and trigger a superpower confrontation.

There are signs that the United States might have been influenced by the Soviet argument about the need for serious action to settle the Arab-Israeli conflict and put an end to the plight of Palestinians under atrocious Israeli occupation. If the Moscow summit indeed achieved such a remarkable breakthrough it would be cited as the most successful meeting in the world's modern history.

Is it a genuine change?

THE RECENT visit of US Secretary of State George Shultz to the region struck many observers as being needlessly undertaken and pointless in its nature. Many people could not just understand why Shultz insists to hammer on a regional acceptability for his initiative, when all parties either rejected it categorically or pointed out serious disagreements with many of its basic points.

Shultz's rhetoric in his earlier tours of the region did not give many Arab leaders any reason to jump on their feet in an enthusiastic embrace of the US initiative. After all, that initiative looked nothing more than a worn-out reflection of the attitudes of the most extreme factions in the Israeli body politic.

The international conference, which constitutes the cornerstone for that initiative, is not the same international conference proposed by Jordan, Syria, and other Arab countries. Shultz was only proposing a ceremonial kind of international cover-up for direct negotiations, which is the only format accepted by Shamir and other radicals in Israel.

US Secretary of State must have realized that his initiative was too biased to the Israeli point of view to be accepted by the Arab leaders and was putting Shamir, who is not interested in peace in the first place, in a tight spot. The three key elements for achieving peace in the region, as mentioned by Shultz earlier this week, give many reasons for optimism — if they indeed reflect a genuine change in attitudes. These key elements are: implementation of UN Resolution 242, addressing the political rights of the Palestinian people and responding to the Israeli security concerns.

Shultz's direct reference to the political rights of the Palestinians in particular is very encouraging, because this is one of very few occasions when a high-ranking US official spoke so clearly on this issue. The Palestinians, it is no secret, are literally starved for a world recognition of their rights and aspirations as a people on equal footing with other people everywhere. The denial of their rights is the root cause of their long and painful struggle against the Israelis, who have denied them everything and stripped them even of their human identity. It remains to be seen, however, if Shultz has the will and courage to carry out his new approach to its practical application.

Summit of solidarity convenes in Algiers

King hails Palestinian uprising, calls for its utilization as political power

ALGIERS (Star/AP/Agencies) — Heads of 17 Arab states and senior officials of three others, as well as PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, began an extraordinary Arab summit here Tuesday with calls from His Majesty King Hussein and Algerian President Chadli Benjedid for support of the seven-month-old Palestinian uprising.

Speaking at the opening session of the summit, held to rally support behind the "Palestinian revolution," King Hussein described the uprising as "the path to liberation and dignity" and compared it to Algeria's struggle for independence from France.

"We extended to our Algerian brothers all the support that we could, offering legendary sacrifices, to grasp their freedom from ugly colonial occupation," the King said, adding "we are gathered here today to recognize another noble event, revolution against another occupation."

"Just as the Algerian revolution united Arabs, the Palestinian revolution on the occupied Palestine soil is uniting our feelings. We stand behind the Palestinian cause until the restoration of Palestinians' legitimate and national rights."

King Hussein paid an emotional tribute to the uprising, offering a "salute of pride" to the Palestinian people. "May God assist us in making the decisions that will consolidate your revolution as the path to liberation and dignity," he said.

Referring to the extraordinary Arab summit concluded in Amman in November last year, where Arab leaders achieved consensus and unanimity, the King said "We meet in Algiers to confront the challenges facing our nation, especially that of Zionism, with its aggressive and expansionist nature."

The King praised the recent decision of Algeria and Morocco to restore diplomatic relations, congratulating the people of the two countries on this step which would lead to more understanding and co-operation.

Algerian President, Chadli Benjedid, opened the summit with a new call for recognition of the PLO: "This is the key to any settlement of the Middle East problem," he said. He urged Arab leaders to unite behind the PLO and the Palestinians' determination to achieve their liberation.

Benjedid asked for support "in words and action because it is a decisive turn and a radical development in the revolution."

PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, wearing his traditional battle-torn keffiyeh, spoke briefly to the opening session, pledging that "our people swear for you to continue the struggle and the 'intifadah' until victory."

Arafat reiterated the PLO's demands, "the right to return (to Palestine), the right to self-determination, and the right to create an independent state with Jerusalem as its capital."

The Arab leaders resumed their meetings Wednesday noon in a closed session that was restricted to heads of delegations.

In his address before the gathering, King Hussein stressed that Jordan has no ambitions in any part of Palestine, and that the Kingdom's attachment to the Arab-Israeli conflict stems not only from its connection with the occupied West Bank, but also from the fact that it stands on the longest line of confrontation with Israel.

The King said that nothing could be harder or more misleading than the misinterpretation of history. "Jordan did not annex the West Bank," King Hussein said. He added that there was an elected parliament in which both the West and East Banks were equally represented. This Parliament took a decision in 1950 to unite the two banks. The second article of this decision emphasized that the Arab rights in Palestine should be protected by all available means, and a final settlement to the Palestinian issue should be reached.

His Majesty said that the Jordanian dimension in the Palestinian issue did not start after 1967. It started when the Palestinian problem was created by the Balfour Declaration and with the Royal Hashemite land when late Sheriff Hussein stood against Britain and refused to give up the Arab rights in Palestine, and when late King Abdullah succeeded in excluding Jordan from the Balfour Declaration.

"The Jordanian army relieved the largest area of what remained of Palestine, including Holy Jerusalem in 1948. And the then representatives of the Palestinian people took steps towards unity," the King explained.

King Hussein said that the unity of the West and East banks of Jordan before 1967 was a living example of a larger unity to which all Arabs looked forward.

"If the representatives of the Palestinian people wish to separate from Jordan, we respect and bless this wish, just as we did the wish of the representatives of the Palestinian people in 1950," King Hussein said.

"We realized at an early time the sensitivity of our brethren in the PLO, and their look towards us as competitors. And thus Jordan in 1972 proposed possible alternatives for Jordanian-Palestinian relations after the liberation (of the land). A United Kingdom was one of the proposals. The other two options were either to have a full merger or to have an independent Palestinian state."

King Hussein said that those who consider our support for our brethren in the occupied territories as attempts to dominate them forget that this support is not only a national obligation, but that it also comes in response to the calls of Arab leaders in the Arab League since 1974, to consolidate steadfastness of Palestinians under occupation. "The Intifadah," the King said, "is the Palestinian revolution which erupted on the Palestinian soil after 20 years of occupation. It is a revolution in as much as it expresses the consensus of the Arab Palestinian people to reject the Israeli occupation in all its forms and dimensions, until the goal of ending the occupation is achieved."

King Hussein said that among the key principles guiding Jordan in its dealing with efforts aimed at bringing about a peaceful settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict are that it will not represent the Palestinian people instead of the PLO, and that Jordan will agree to attend the proposed international peace conference in a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation if the parties involved agree to that.

"Regardless of the decisions we take to support the Palestinian uprising or any other considerations," the King stressed, "we in Jordan will continue to perform our national duties in supporting the uprising against the occupation."

He said that the uprising should be utilized in pursuing political action, and its continuation means maintaining pressure on Israel, and boosting national interest, especially in the United States, as the necessity of achieving a comprehensive peaceful settlement to the conflict.

One day earlier Shultz told Arab reporters in Damascus that the United States and the Soviet Union "have both agreed to address ourselves to the Middle East issues" and said there would be more talks. "We will have some continuing discussions, probably before long, on an intensive basis," Shultz told a news conference shortly before his meeting with Assad.

Shultz noted that the superpowers have resolved many of their own disputes, "and if we can solve some of our problems, why can't the people in the (Middle East) area come to grips with their own?"

The summit pointed the United States and Soviet Union in a more co-operative direction in dealing with regional disputes, and Shultz hopes Syria will take a cue from Moscow.

Speaking to the Arab journalists, Shultz repeated his contention that the Palestinian state on the West Bank and Gaza Strip demanded by Arabs "just doesn't make any sense." He said "a confederation, or an attachment to another state or states" was "a more workable way of looking at it." He suggested: American States or Swiss Cantons as possible models for a future Palestinian entity.

7th Jordan Rally starts Wednesday

Auto champs battle in Amman

By Frida Mdanat
Star Staff Writer

SEVERAL COMPETITORS have gathered in Jordan over the past few days where they started preparing the routes for the 7th Jordan International Rally taking place between 20 and 27 of this month.

The three-day event, sponsored by Rothmans and organized by the Royal Automobile Club of Jordan, features the third round of the Middle East 1988 Rally Championships.

With Mayor of Greater Amman Abdul Raouf Al Rawabdeh giving the start signal, 36 competing cars from 10 different countries started from the Roman Amphitheatre on Wednesday 15 to cover a distance of 1295 kilometers which include 37 special stages totalling 415 kilometres.

The first leg of the rally, taking place at night, covers the roads in and around Jerash in the north, while the second leg takes the competing cars to the south, towards Petra, and the third takes them through the King Highway, wherefrom they will head to Alia Gateway, the regrouping point.

World championships

The race, featuring a variety of routes and stages over asphalt, gravel, desert and forest tracks, has been described by rally officials as "surpassing most world rallies on FISA's standard (Federation National Des Sports Automobile). For this reason and for the efficiency and success of previous years' rallies as well as the media coverage they merited, the event has been chosen for the second consecutive year as a candidate for the inclusion in World Rally Championships.

The 1987 rally scored 177 points out of 200 which is considered high according to FISA standards and to other rally members.

Tough competition

Competitors in this year's event include a number of Arab and world champions from Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Sweden, Britain and Germany.

Among those are Ola Stroemberg from Sweden, driving a Saab, Zdenek Mrazek, from Germany, driving a Toyota Celica 200 4WD and David Llewellyn, from Britain, who participates for the first time in an event outside Europe, driving an Audi Quattro A2. He is champion of several European rallies, namely the 1986 Circuit of Ireland, 1987 Scottish Rally and 1987 Cyprus Rally and holder of sixth position in the 1987 RAC Lombard Rally which is one of the rounds of the world rally championships.

The participation of Mohammad Bin Sulayem, United Arab Emirates, and Saeed Al Hajri, Qatar, confirms many people's expectations for a tough competition. Mohammad Bin Sulayem, the 1987 champion is in the lead for the Middle East championship having won the first and second rounds in Qatar and Kuwait earlier this year with a score of 134 points.

In his Toyota Celica Turbo, Sulayem is in for a hot competition with Saeed Al Hajri in an Audi Quattro A2 who will try to regain the first position that he lost to Bin Sulayem in 1987. This year he scored 100 points.

Michel Saleh, from Lebanon, driving also an Audi Quattro A2, was the Jordan 1981 and 1982 rally champion and holds the position for 1988, having scored 22 points during the first and second rounds although he did not finish the second one when his car broke down.

On the local scene, His Royal Highness Prince Abdullah and Hani Bisharat came in the lead competing with Al Hajri and Bin Sulayem.

Hani Bisharat came third last year after the above-mentioned two Middle East champions, winning the Jordan 1987 championship and Prince Abdullah, who won this year's Jerash Rally despite rough weather conditions, has high hopes for the current international event.

Other top Jordanian competitors include George Khayyat, Khaled Dallal, Nabil Karam, Sharif Jamil Bin Nasser, and Issa Halabi. According to latest Rally registration list, there will be 21 Jordanian participating teams.

Petra Stage

In a press release issued by the Royal Silk Cut Rally Team, Ali Bibeisi, co-driver of Prince Abdullah, announced the Petra Stage as the most difficult, "being the longest and toughest one where also competitors must try to keep the car in good shape for the following day."

Jordanian champions are up against tough routes and experienced competitors

He added that the results of the Petra leg will help predict the winners of the championship.

Finish line

The finish line will be at the Marriott Hotel where the press office will be situated and the daily as well as the final results announced.

Vasco leads Rio state soccer tournament

Flamengo qualifies for the finals

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Vasco Da Gama defeated Flamengo 1-0 Sunday to take the lead in the third round of the Rio State Soccer Championship. All-star centre-forward Romario scored the lone goal on a rebound at 8 minutes on a chilly afternoon that drew only 12,000 fans to Rio's Maracana Stadium.

Americano players complained that Romario was offside, and the videotape replay showed he indeed was, but the referee upheld the goal. The victory moved Vasco the sole lead in the tournament's third round, among the four teams that had the most points in the first two rounds.

Flamengo and Fluminense tied 0-0 on Saturday. Flamengo and Vasco, the winners of the first and second rounds, have already qualified for the finals and either one also wins the third round, Fluminense and Americano must win the third round to reach the finals.

In Sao Paulo, six clubs have qualified for the eight-team semifinal playoffs with one game remaining in the regular season.

Corinthians, Santos, Sao Paulo,

Ponte Preta, Internacional and Bandeirantes have guaranteed berths in the semifinals, which start next week. Palmeiras, Guarani and Sao Jose are battling for the remaining two spots.

Sao Paulo, with an excellent performance by all-star striker Muller, defeated Mogi Mirim 4-0 Sunday to clinch a playoff spot. Santos also qualified with a 1-0 victory over Uniao. Veteran midfielder Mendonca scored the winning goal on a penalty kick. Ponte Preta and Internacional, already qualified for the Semifinals, tied 1-1.

Corinthians guaranteed its spot in the playoffs with a 1-0 win over 15 De Piracicaba. Midfielder Everton scored the game winner on an excellent individual play at 79 minutes. Bandeirantes, already qualified, tied 1-1 with

Portuguesa. Surprising Sao

Jose, coached by former all-star Goalee Leao, took a big step toward qualification with a 4-3 victory over Santo Andre. Sao Jose is in third place in group B with 26 points and can guarantee a berth in the playoffs with a tie against Modest, Sao Bento next Sunday.

Guarani, in fourth place with 26 points, was idle Sunday and faces Santo Andre in its final game. Palmeiras, a traditional power and twice national champion, kept its hopes alive with a 2-0 victory over America, on two goals by all-star midfielder Edu.

Palmeiras is in fifth place with 24 points and must win its final game against 15 De Piracicaba. In other games, Juventus tied 1-1 with 15 de Jau, Sao Bento tied 1-1 with Ferroviaria, and Noroeste tied 0-0 with Novorizontino.

England faces uphill struggle

NOTTINGHAM, England (AP) — England's batsmen were forced to dig in and defend as they set out on the road to safety in the first test match against the West Indies Monday. Trailing the tourists by 203 on first innings, England ended the fourth day on 87 for 1 in its second innings, with Graham Gooch on 30 and Skipper Mike Gatting on eight.

A further 136 were needed on Tuesday, the last day of the rain-affected match, to avoid an innings defeat. Chris Broad was the England batsman out as his side tried to stay out of trouble after the West Indies had declared at 448 for nine.

The Nottinghamshire opener, who made 54 in the first innings and featured in a stand of 125 with Gooch, followed an angled ball from Curtly Ambrose and was caught behind by Jeff Dujon. With a minimum 95 overs to be bowled on Tuesday, the tourists looked well capable of recording an 11th successive victory over the hosts.

England's second innings rearguard action was forced on them by the West Indies late-order. Hooper scoring 84 and pacemaker Malcolm Marshall and Ambrose having a fling with the bat, captain Viv Richards was able to declare seven balls after tea.

Marshall thrashed two successive sixes off John Emburey, who had 37 runs taken off three overs on Saturday, and followed that with another off Derek Pringle. He hit 27 in just nine balls and had advanced to 72 when he was bowled by Emburey attempting another big hit. Marshall added 91 for the eighth wicket with Ambrose, who also had his moments, lifting Emburey over the long-on boundary for six and making a test best 43.

Before lunch, England limited the West Indies to just 70 and took two wickets. Gus Logie caught by Gooch at second slip for 20 and Dujon giving Dilley a return catch. Carl Hooper was on his way to a maiden test century when he was out immediately after lunch, caught behind by Paul Downton for 84 off Philip DeFreitas.

BRIDGE

Dealer: East. Love all. At both tables in a match East opened One Spade, South overcalled with Two Clubs, and West passed. At this point North at one table bid Two Spades, and South, not sure what was happening, bid Three Spades. North, delighted, bid 3NT. This was a clever way of dealing with the spade suit, but unfortunately East had another string to his bow. He led the king of hearts and his side made five tricks in hearts and the ace of clubs.

At the other table North raised Two Clubs to Four Clubs. South advanced to Five Clubs and West led the jack of spades. Declarer drew from dummy and East played the 3. South quite shrewdly allowed the king to hold, and West now eliminated the hearts and spades, then gave East the lead with the ace of clubs. End of defence.

"It's the same if I lead a diamond at trick two, isn't it?" said West.

"Yes," said his partner. "I wanted you to lead a club. Then I can exit with a heart or a spade, and we easily make three tricks."

Nevertheless, a heart would have been right if East had held, say, K Q x of hearts and Q 10 x of diamonds. Let's say that most players would have done the same as West.

The Poky Little Puppy Part V

By Janette Lowrey Illustrated By Gustaf Tenggren

But their mother was greatly displeased. "So you're the little puppies who dig holes under fences!" she said. "No rice pudding tonight!" And she made them go straight to bed.

But the poky little puppy came home after everyone was sound asleep.

He ate up the rice pudding and crawled into bed as happy as a lark.

The next morning someone had filled the hole and put up a sign. The sign said:

But....

The five little puppies dug a hole under the fence, just the same and went for a walk in the wide, wide world.

Through the meadow they went, down the road, over the bridge, across the green grass, and up the hill, two and two. And when they got to the top of the hill, they counted themselves: one, two, three, four. One little puppy wasn't there.

"Now where in the world is that poky little puppy?" they wondered. For he certainly wasn't on top of the hill.

He wasn't going down the other side. The only thing they could see going down was a big black spider.

He wasn't coming up this side. The only thing they could see coming up was a brown hop-toad.

But when they looked at the grassy place near the bottom of the hill, there was the poky little puppy, sitting still as a stone, with his head on one side and his ears cocked up.

"What is he doing?" the four little puppies asked one another. And down they went to see, roly-poly, pell-mell, tumble-bumble, till they came to the green grass; and there they stopped short.

"What in the world are you doing?" they asked.

"I hear something!" said the poky little puppy.

The four little puppies listened, and they could hear it, too. "Chocolate custard!" they cried. "Someone is spooning it into our bowls!"

And home they went as fast as they could go, over the bridge, up the road, through the meadow, and under the fence. And there, sure enough, was dinner waiting for them, with chocolate custard for dessert.

But their mother was greatly displeased. "So you're the little puppies who will dig holes under fences!" "No chocolate custard tonight!" And she made them go straight to bed.
